

Musical “Beauty and the Beast”

Once upon a time ... a prince living in a palace surrounded by red roses, symbol of the Kingdom of Roses and rare wealth in the contiguous realms. The prince, who was known to be very bad, lazy and extremely vain, lived indifferent to the beauty and purity of roses. He was concerned only with his own beauty and with more and more gold. Taking advantage of the absence of his father, the King, he sold tons of roses to the neighboring kingdoms, who were not lucky enough to see such special wealth grow in their lands. One day, the protecting fairy of the roses fearing that they would end up in the Kingdom, she cursed the prince into a monster, and all the roses in the kingdom became black, a symbol of sadness, so that she could no longer sell them. To look like a prince he would now have to find a woman who would fall in love with him and only then would all the roses of the Kingdom be red again. But who will ever fall in love with a Monster?
